The ExBookie Introduction

3rd September 2011

Sgt Karl Introduces The ExBookie

Hello Bloggers,

Our next service we are trialing is called ExBookie, the service comes from the Betfan camp, as many of you will be familiar by now Betfan email their tips out as well as giving you the option to log into their site to get the tips.

The Exbookie tips are on Horse Racing and we get a theory behind the picks which is nice, The service costs £57 per month or £140 per quarter. We will start with a 50 point bank.

Here is the Exbookie's take on his service.

"I advise a bank of 50 points to follow this service with (ie. £500 bank becomes £10 per point).

This service is based around value and thus getting prices is important.

Firstly, and obviously, make sure you get the best price about selections. This may mean opening a few more bookmaker accounts.

Secondly, make sure if there's a choice between the same price with two different bookmakers that you choose the one with best odds guaranteed.

Thirdly, a lot of the races which I'll be looking at will sometimes offer five places for ew bets and if prices are the same and they are at bog bookmakers then choose the bookmaker with the best place terms."

As always we will do an initial review of 56 betting days and if the service shows promise we will extend that to 84 days.

Since the Exbookie service launched it has made an impressive 158 pt profit, so hopefully that will continue.

Assured Soccer Profits – Introduction

26th August 2011

Insp Rich Introduces Assured Soccer Profits

Insp Karl has had to withdraw from reviewing Assured Soccer Profits, due to family commitments.

Assured Soccer Profits (ASP) is from the John Duncan stable and promises slow and steady results, rather than instant riches. It costs £89 (including vat) and for this you get a 90-page PDF manual, a stake calculator and twenty videos. Although £89 may seem on the expensive side, I have rarely seen so much quality information accompanying a system/strategy. There is almost too much info to absorb on the member's website, but to me it indicates the quality of the strategy and the integrity of the vendor/developer. Also the contributions from other members, indicates there are some serious users of this Assured Soccer Profits strategy.

Perhaps the most surprising thing, compared to other products being sold, is that the member's area includes a well-written Blog by the developer, Geoff, who includes actual Betfair screen shots of his profit and loss for the day! A complete spreadsheet of all matches for the past 18 months is also available to members.

The recommended starting bank is £200. What you do is lay certain scenarios on Betfair and close out the bets at or before half time, for, hopefully, a profit. Things will sometimes go wrong and one of the things the author does is teach you not to panic and to recover as best you can when they do go wrong. All users of ASP will trade at slightly different times and you pick matches where there is plenty of liquidity, so you should have no problem having your bets matched.

The aim is to make around £4 per match with modest stakes. This low level was developed deliberately, by the author of Assured Soccer Profits, Geoff, to show how it can be used by anybody, even with small stakes. You should be able to find several matches on most football days, especially weekends and on mid-week match days. But you do need to stick to matches with plenty of money being traded. It is not advisable to pick obscure matches with very little trading and also, you need to make sure the matches will have an in-play market.

During this review, when I am in the groove with it, I will try to do as many matches as possible; to see just how much can be made.

You pick your matches using a short checklist of simple things to check. I'll try to give an idea of how much time I spend finding the matches, as we go along. You do need to watch the match score, at least during the first half, but this is easy to do with a score alert website. (I use Futbol24.com – the author recommends flashscore.com)

The Assured Soccer Profits manual and videos go into a lot of detail about calculating your bets to trade out on the match and it comes complete with a calculator. The spreadsheet/calculator is very good and thorough at optimising your bets. There are also many Betfair interfaces that will work these things out for you. Personally I use BFExplorer. There is a free interface called GeeksToys which will also do this for you. But you may prefer to use the Assured Soccer Profits spreadsheet/calculator if you want to maintain a profit differential depending upon different outcomes. I'll start off using the spreadsheet calculator and the Betfair website, rather than another interface and we will see how I get on.

I like the common-sense approach of the manual – for example it says that “some games WILL go wrong. Just both ACCEPT that and EXPECT that before you start using this system”.

At another point the author goes into the metaphysical idea of the Law of Attraction – make of that what you will.

I personally spent a lot of time researching this particular Betfair market on football, especially over the last two seasons, so I am quite familiar with the concepts described in the manual. If you are not too familiar with this market, then the manual may seem a little complicated, so take your time reading and understanding it. Also making notes as you read will help to identify the key points. the manual is long (93 pages), and re-reading could become laborious, so I advise making notes of the key points as you read it.

It has to be said that the second half of the manual covers trading situations and it is clear that much of this is down to individual judgment. So this is far from a rigid system. It is a trading strategy and the flexibility; skill required; and potential losses when things go wrong, will not be to everyone's taste. So my review will be MY experience and some of my success or failure may not be reproduced when readers apply this strategy. I will try to differentiate the, hopefully majority of cases, when the profits don't require much judgment, from those profits and losses that do require more individual decision making.

The strategy is purely mathematical with no study of form. The match selection is based entirely upon the odds offered and liquidity of the market. At the end of the manual, it does give some pointers, if you want to take form into account in your match selection, but personally I think such form factors would be reflected in the odds offered on Betfair so I don't see much need to study form for this strategy.

I am about half-way through the 20 videos – they are very good, my only complaint is that John's voice is a little quiet and conversational at times and I couldn't pick up every word even with my PC at full volume. But they cover things very well.

I propose to start the review tomorrow (Saturday) and will finish off viewing the videos as soon as possible.

Expected Winners – Final Review Summary

30th August 2011

Inspector John
Reviews Expected
Winners

Hello Bloggers,

As you will be aware, our reviewer Inspector John, ran into some problems with our review of Expected Winners, when he had the audacity to question some of the results being claimed by Adrian Davies, mainly associated with his Greyhound selections.

He met with a very dismissive response, amid various claims of wealth, achieved one assumes either from his betting success, or from managing to get plenty of people to pay for his information, you decide.

Subsequently, and in an attempt to bring you a review we were actually quite excited about initially, I attempted to contact Adrian Davies myself. I apologised for any problems we may have caused him, ate a large portion of humble pie, and asked if we could restart the review of his service for our readers. I even suggested that we could focus purely on his main selections, the one people actually pay for, and ignore the "free" selections completely. I must confess I have always struggled to understand how any selections can be free, when to receive them you have to pay approx £100 per month subscription fees?

Several weeks have passed, and my email has been met with stoney silence on the part of Adrian Davies, so we have no alternative now, other than to give up and bring the review to a halt.

I must also confess to having had some previous experience of Adrian Davies and his service, as I reviewed and monitored it several years ago. Then, as now, things ended in tears! Once again the main problem was the Greyhound selections, with on many occasions Lay selections being put up at non BAGS meeting, so it was not even possible to get a bet on!! This never stopped Adrian Davies including them in his results as successful lay bets!!

So in conclusion, we have no option, other than to fail the Expected Winners service, not least because of Adrian Davies's attitude when questioned about his results.

I apologise to Inspector John for hijacking his review, but felt it was my duty, under the circumstances, to wrap this one up.

Regards

Gordon

Pro Betfair Trading – Final Review

3rd September 2011

Inspector Rich – Reviews Pro Betfair Trading

Rating: ★★★★★

Passed

We have come to the end of the 56-day review period and as this strategy has proved to be profitable and as it is a mathematical or statistical strategy, I am happy that it will consistently make a profit whatever period of time is involved. See the graph below. The trend line shows a steady increase. Despite loss of all the profit so far, about half way through the review, the balance quickly recovered to its previous level and continued to trend upwards afterwards.

Out of 103 trades, 66 of them have now been profitable, 3 with zero profit, and 2 non-runners. 32 have made a loss. So 31% have made a loss – this has consistently hovered around the 30% mark through the review. The strategy predicts the losing trades will be between 20% and 30%. For me it has been around 30% for most of the review A strike rate or success rate of almost 70%.

A brief recap of the strategy: Without giving details away, you initially lay the selected horse when it shows the “perfect set up” pattern and then back it at, hopefully, higher odds. It is vital to accept losses when they occur and trade-out, otherwise, if you hope for a turnaround, you are simply gambling and not trading.

It is worth noting that Pro Betfair Trading does not involve any form study or statistics. It is purely determined by the movement of the odds. You do need to monitor races as they occur for a ten minute period before the off time and there is no realistic way to anticipate in advance which races may be candidate races. Therefore it is only suitable for those who can be in front of their computer during racing.

In practice and even though I was doing other betting and trading, I did find it frustrating to have to check race after race only to find no “perfect set up”. If I hadn’t been occupied doing other things. I think this constant checking of every race would have driven me mad! I can think of no way around this, you simply have to use the Betfair interface to check every race before the race start. The manual says to check it 10 minutes before race time. I did find that doing that I missed some “perfect set ups” and the odds had already gone against me before getting on with my first lay bet. I started checking more like 15 minutes before the off time and this did coincide with the sharp recovery shown on the graph. So I would advise checking for a candidate horse 15 minutes before the race time and applying the check of the odds for a half a minute or so, just as the manual suggests.

As well as the highly selective nature of the selection process, I have to say that the liquidity available on many races is an issue. Many UK races (except the major meetings) have just less than a hundred available on the back price that you want to take just before the off. Of course you can include the money available at one or two ticks lower, but this would seriously impinge upon your profit if you are using high stakes.

With a bank of £500 and lay bets of £25, your matching back bet of £20 or so, would easily be matched. But once you wanted to place a back bet to match, say a £250+ lay, as shown on the sales page and the manual – you would have to factor in allowing one, two, or three ticks lower to get your stakes matched.

The theory behind the Pro Betfair Trading strategy is an intriguing and rather clever one. According to this theory, the odds will go out after the “perfect set up”. There are lots of factors that determine whether a horse goes out in the odds or comes in, that are not taken into account in the Pro Betfair Trading theory. Things like how the horse looks in the parade ring, how it goes down to the start, how it loads into the stalls, withdrawn horses, etc. The theory in the manual predicts why the odds will go out, and doesn’t take any of those things into account.

To be honest, I am surprised that the odds do seem to go out 70% of the time, so it looks like the theory behind this strategy has some validity.

The total profit (£32.76) to £25 stakes (£500 bank) is small for the time spent monitoring the races. So to make this worthwhile, you would need to have significantly higher stakes. The profit is not scalable pro-rata, for the liquidity reason given above. You would probably have to take some ticks lower for your back stakes – this will reduce your profits and increase your losses.

Profitability compared to liquidity needed: £32.76 profit on £500 bank = 6.55% profit. So I give it 3 stars out of 5 for profitability.

Ease of use: The Betfair interface is all you need to detect the “perfect setup”. It is quite easy to spot them, but due to their infrequency it is very tempting to see an almost perfect setup and hope that will be close enough. The discipline needed to avoid these is quite hard. For that reason I give 2 stars out of 5 for ease of use

Risk: The bank was never threatened and for that bank level for this review period we could easily have had more than the recommended 5% on each lay. The worst losing period only lost about £28 in total! You have to accept the 30% losing trades when they occur and you absolutely must trade out on a loss and not hope the odds go in your favour after the start of the race! 5 stars out of 5 for low risk

Return on liability (ROL): Rather meaningless as this is trading, not laying or backing. The longest odds that I layed at were 9.8 at £25 lay stake – that required £220 funds in Betfair. It was also one of the most profitable trades being backed at 16.0 for a 9.60 profit. The ROI on that was 4.37%. A more usual trade was £25 lay at 3.90 with a £72.50 liability, traded at 4.20 for a £1.55 profit giving a ROI of 2.14%'. You could put a max lay price of 5.0 or 6.0 to cap you liability. It wouldn't alter your success rate, it would just mean you got fewer trades. 2 stars out of 5 for ROL.

Support and documentation: The manual is OK. The English is a bit clumsy at times, but the explanations are clear enough. 3 stars out of 5 for documentation

Time needed to apply the strategy: Each race takes only 30 seconds to check for the perfect setup. But you need to check every race that way for however long you want to monitor races for each day. Any race that you don't check could be one that has the perfect set up, but most races don't. I probably spent about 2 hours per day on average, including missing some days completely. I found it very frustrating to check race after race with no trades. 0.5 stars out of 5 for time needed to make the profit that I made.

The average of the above is 3.1 stars. So I am passing this system with a rating of 3 stars. To sum up I would say this is a safe strategy, but with low profit for the time spent to get it. But you must accept losses when they happen or this would not be safe and would be gambling not trading

Will I be using Pro Betfair Trading from now on? Not on a regular basis, but if I spot a perfect setup any time, I would certainly use it – I just wouldn't go looking for them too intensively! It's a useful and profitable trading strategy to have.

Betfair: Truths, Lies and Statistics – Discussion

\(See the 1st article here...\)

\(See the 2nd article here...\)

\(See the 3rd article here...\)

I am grateful for this contribution from one of our readers, Ian. Please join in the debate, my short answers are inserted:

Hi Rich,

Thank you for a misleading article. I'm not being facetious, I really mean every word. You may wish to use this for a Rant etc. and/or to do more digging into the points I raise.

What I am talking about is your Betfair: Truths, Lies and Statistics. In particular, your interpretation of Peter Webb's article.

But let's start with the premise that the Betfair Odds are always correct - at that moment. I don't necessarily agree with that, but it is a useful starting premise.

In your 2nd article and in this one, you suggest :

'...if we watch the changes in Betfair prices, especially with horse racing, during the Parade and going down to the Start, we can use Betfair as a predictor, not of the runner's chances (that will always be exactly accurate at any moment) but as a predictor of whether the probability is going to increase or decrease (odds shorten or lengthen). So we can trade the prices. '

The problem with doing this is our premise that the Betfair Odds are always correct. Thus any tendency for the odds to shorten (or to lengthen) has already been taken into account. This is because everybody who believes the odds will shorten (thus in theory, the chances of winning increase) will want to put their bet on. But that drives the odds down and so the odds going down are (in theory) predictable, so people will be prepared to take odds lower than the current odds now - based upon that prediction.

Do you see that this is an infinite cycle - driving the odds down to 1.01?

But that doesn't happen in real life - at least not before the start of the race. Thus either our original premise is wrong, or you can't (on average) make money trading as you suggested.

I agree with what you say in theory, but Betfair price movements are a continuous thing, if you see them going down, it is a prediction that the probability of winning is increasing. Therefore it can be used to predict further decreases in odds. Obviously at some point the market is saturated at that price/probability. This would reverse the odds or fix them at that probability. I don't think this invalidates the idea that the Betfair prices reflect the true chances of the runner.

OK, let's now look at what we know about the data upon which Peter Webb bases his 2010 article. The first thing to note is that it is old data (from November 2004). So it is from a time when there was less trading and no Betfair SP.

True

Secondly, he only references odds between 2.0 and 1.01 - it is not clear whether he collected data outside this very narrow range or not; and if he did whether that data supports his conclusion as well as the 2.0 to 1.01 data does.

True

Thirdly it is not clear exactly which data he collected. It is likely that he took every traded price for each horse (within his odd range). But he may have weighted that by the trade size - or made other adjustments - see next point.

True

Fourthly it is not clear over which timeframe before the start of each race he collected the data. But we can assume that it was over a more than just the last few minutes.

True

Thus what does he do about Non-Runners? I expect that he ignores them and you may think that this is OK to do since the odds for all the remaining horses adjust for the non-runners. But this is wrong, because the race is changed by the non-runners.

So you can't use the outcome of the race after non-runners to verify the chances of winning versus odds a horse traded at before the non-runner was declared. Because it is not the same race.

True - I don't know whether Peter took these into consideration.

Finally, you say that Peter Webb is the developer of BetAngel. Does this make him an unbiased researcher with no particular agenda to push? I say that no, it does not, he has an interest in persuading people to trade rather than to do straight Backs or Lays.

I agree. His article was presented by me as one piece of evidence as to the accuracy of Betfair. I mentioned another source in the overall article and I have other opinions/sources/research I could quote, but didn't want to bore the readers.

Might this have influenced his article, the way that the data was presented and selected? - Of course it may.

This is even very well known to happen with medical research (sponsors in general get the results they want- or at least not those they least want) - which is why regulatory bodies specify and oversee drug tests in the final stages before allowing them to be sold - and still get it badly wrong. In the 1950s how many tobacco industry sponsored researchers concluded that there was no link between smoking and Lung Cancer? - Lots.

Regards,
Ian

League Table of Current Reviews

Return to Contents/Index of this newsletter

A reasonable way of comparing the performance of systems is to work out the profit (or loss) as a percentage of the starting bank. Obviously this table doesn't replace reading the reviews, because profit as %age of bank is not the only factor in judging a system. Nevertheless, it is a valid at-a-glance way of bringing the mass of data together.

I've colour coded the reviews that are the currently most successful, with the colour of their profitability graph to make them easier to spot. Some of the suspended reviews have been taken off the graph.

Turf Wars has moved into the top ten this week.

Betplan now has two reports for the 5% ratchet system at SP and at Early Odds – both doing fantastically well!

Profitability Graph

Here is a graph of the profit being made by the front-runners as a percentage of their starting bank. This gives a week by week comparative view of their progress.

It gives a representation of the volatility or dependability of each system. Ideally we would want a graph that increased each week by roughly the same amount. If a system or tipping service could produce that, then we would really have a winning review!

The graph has gone mad this week! The Betplan figures have gone right off the chart! If I scale it to include them it would put the others along the bottom, which would make the graph meaningless. I'll have to figure out a solution for next week.

Turf Wars looks like it might be a roller-coaster ride just as it was in the first review.
