INTRODUCTION

Hi Folks,

This week we have one Final Review. Turf Wars has been passed by Gordon. We also have a new Review – Football Power Betting

In the Current Reviews section of this newsletter, the LayTheOdds reviews are in dark violet to help differentiate them from the BettingSystemTruths reviews that are in blue.

The results, league table and profitability graph include Monday evening reports, making the newsletter as up to date as possible when you receive the newsletter on the Wednesday morning.

Unfortunately our best performing reviews, Bonus Bagging and Sprint Lay Experts have not reported anything this week. RebelBetting and the ABSX Method are making steady progress.

We'd like to hear from you, please contact me by e-mail via the Bloggers Corner at rich@bettingsystemtruths.com

New Reviews

Football Power Betting - Introduction

08th august 2011

Sergeant Lucian - Introduces Football Power Betting

Hi Bloggers, May I introduce you to Football Power Betting software, which is a bet structuring program suite. Its purpose is to aid to achieve long term profit on football betting.

"Football Power Betting is NOT a forecasting system, it is NOT a tipping service."

The Football Power Betting software three areas are:

1. Perms – Structurating bets on multiple.

2. Correct Score – Structurating bets on correct score

3. Covered – Structurating bets to cover 1×2 bets with correct score.

The software give two options for betting math:

1.Profit Target Bets – Calculate "structured bets" to provide the Profits you are looking for.

2. Set your own Total Stake Level

Profit Target Diversification will help to lower Total Stake required and generate bets capable of covering losing bets without breaking the bank. The other facilities of the program are: Save Bets and Notes, print bets for record keeping or to take down to a local bookie.

The software works with European odds. Price for this software tool is 49 pounds.

About the review – it will be a 12 weeks review and the tool will be used at midweeks and at weekends football matches.

The review will cover all three tactics and will be test it with my selections from top leagues. I'll use 3 banks of 1000 point each and 50 point risk bets on every area.

Regards, Sgt Lucian

Turf Wars – Final Review Summary

7th August 2011

Admin Gordon – Reviews Turf Wars

PASSED and APPROVED

Rating: ⭐⭐⭐☆☆

Hello everyone,

The review of Turf Wars has come to an end, and now it is time to share my thoughts and experiences with you, as well as the actual results.

So, what is Turf Wars?

Well, Turf Wars is a selection service, brought to us by Lisa Powell, and marketed by Betfan.

Lisa provides selections almost every day, and although the Turf Wars service covers primarily Football, as the title suggests, Lisa will also put up selections for an array of different sports, for example, horse racing, snooker, golf, darts, F1 racing and Tennis, to name a few. Some of these can be anti-post bets.

Lisa will normally send her Turf Wars selections via email the previous evening, but to follow her in every selection she gives, you will need to be able to check your inbox during the day, as additional selections can be received. The tendency to do this did drop off towards the end of the review however.

With each of her selections Lisa gives a full explanation of her thinking behind the bet.

She always advises the stake for all her bets, ranging from a max of 10pts. Lisa will also often advise multiple bets, again all is explained and stakes advised. She will often also recommend the bookmaker who is offering the odds she quotes.

So, how did the review actually go?

The review of Turf Wars lasted for a total of 98 days, it exceeded the normal 84 days, a) because I was on holiday and would not have time to compile the final summary, and b) I chose day 98 as it was the last day of July. No bet days are extremely rare with Turf Wars, I don't think there were more than 2.

When the dust had settled, we were left showing a decent profit of 126.23 pts for the duration of the review, and with a total stakes figure of 2099.50 pts for the 98 days a ROI of 6% So Turf Wars has to be a pass based on that performance.

The average stakes were 21.6 pts per day. Now, when the review started the recommended bank, which we used, was 100pts, a bit scary when you are staking on average over 21% of the starting bank each day. The recommended bank was increased to 150pts during the review, but even that may not be enough for comfort.

This service is certainly not for the faint hearted, but if you can stay the distance you are in for some real excitement! During the course of the review, we saw daily profit returns of, for example, 49pts, 56pts, 63pts, 40pts, 89pts, 59pts, 64pts, 30pts, 30pts, 83pts, 33pts, 20pts,and 36pts, these are just some of the highlights.

On the minus side, you will encounter many losing days as well, it happens, and you can lose anything up to 30pts on a bad day, hence the caution regards the size of the recommended betting bank.

It has to said unfortunately, that the review was definitely a game of two halves! The review started on the 25th of April, and fairly soon we hit a rich vein of form! By the end of May we were some 286pts in profit!

Unfortunately June saw us take a loss of some 88pts, and July was also a bad month with another 72pts finding its way back into the bookmakers coffers. This means that anyone who joined at the start of June would most likely have lost their initial starting bank of 150pts by the end of July.

I have to perfectly honest and say that is likely that many subscribers who have lived through the poor months of June and July must be wondering what on earth they have done!

Had it not been for this volatility in the profit/loss department, I would have rated Turf Wars even more highly!

Let's look at the performance in a bit more detail, and see if there are any ways of improving the return.

For example, Lisa, like many of us, appears to have a love for the horses. She is plugged into at least one source of information. By my calculations, the horse racing selections during this review lost in excess of 124pts, so we could have been looking at nearly doubling the final profit to over 250pts by ignoring the horse racing selections. To be fair to Lisa, I think she may have already realized this, as horse selections were practically nonexistent towards the end of the review.

Another area I have my doubts about are multiple bets. I won't do the maths, but my gut instinct is that the multiple bets will show an overall loss as well maybe. I fully appreciate that when backing very short prices, multiple bets is an excellent way of trying to boost returns, and Lisa has had some spectacular successes, but I just feel that overall they will have lost money, especially in the second half of the review, when the selections were performing far less predictably.

Another observation, which is very easy to make, is that things went South as soon as the Domestic Football season ended, and Lisa was having to scour the world to find Football to bet on. One couldn't help thinking that sometimes the games we were betting on, in Singapore for example, were not much better than Sunday League games.

As a matter of interest I also recorded a level stakes profit of 46pts for the period of the review. I must make it clear however, that my level stakes were selective, and I ignored the Lucky 15 bets completely. The only multiple I would record for level stakes purposes, apart from doubles and trebles, were Patents and Trixies.

So, in conclusion.

Starting bank   100pts

Finishing bank   226.23pts

Review profit   126.23pts

Total stakes   2099.50pts

ROI   6.0%

Level stakes profit 46.01pts

I was impressed with Lisa herself, she obviously works hard to bring the selections to her members. She is also very helpful and approachable. She is also well supported by Betfan, who provide full selections and results on their website.

I have spoken to Lisa, and she assures me that she has made a very good living for 5 years now from her selections. As I mentioned earlier in this summary, there are definite indications that performance may be better during the domestic season, and with that in mind the good news is we are going to put that theory to the test!

Turf Wars is to undergo another review, over on our sister site www.laytheodds.com and should hopefully start to coincide with the kick-off of the Premier League!

I have thoroughly enjoyed this review, there was hardly ever a dull moment!

If you would enjoy the "rush" that the very good days can bring, and can take the long term view which will allow you to deal with the bad days, which all systems and services have, then Turf Wars may be for you.

Take a look at it here, and grab a free 5 day trial.

Betfair, Truths, Lies and Statistics

Most of us use Betfair one way or another in our betting, but how well do we understand the mechanisms involved? How accurate are Betfair prices? How can we profit? Can we profit?

The web has a lot of advice about and research into the Betfair prices and the general consensus is that Betfair is the most accurate assessment of the probability of an outcome. Briefly, the odds are a measure of the entrant's chances. If a horse is offered at 2.0 this means that, on average, the horse is expected to win 50% of the times that this particular race is run. Of course the race is only run once and the horse may or may not win that race. But the idea of probability is that over a period of time, horses at 2.0 will win 50% of their races. The larger the number of races, the closer the actual results will get to this 50% mark. In the mathematical subject of Statistics, this is known as the "Law of Averages", or more accurately as the "Law of Large Numbers".

In case you don't know, you can quickly convert any decimal price to a probability percentage. The formula is 100/odds. So 2.0 is 50% probability; 3.0 is 33% probability; 4.0 is 25% probability; 1.5 is 66%.; and so on.

So a horse at 1.50 will, on average, win 2 races out of every 3. Does this help us make a profit? Well no, not really! All this means, is that over time we will break even by winning and losing the predicted number of times. Then we have the Betfair commission of 5% on all winning bets. So actually, on average, we will lose money. The 5% commission on winning horses at 2.0 means that for every £100 we place on horses at 2.0 on Betfair, we, on average, lose £50 on the losers and make £47.50 profit on every winner. Making a net average loss of £2.50 on every £100 placed.

For a 66% chance at odds of 1.5, on average, we lose £33.33 on the losers out of £100 invested and make £66.67 minus 5% = £63.34 on the winners, making a net loss on average of £3.33 for every £100 placed.

We still won't make a profit on longer priced horses. Take one at odds of 4.0 which has a 25% chance of winning. For every £100 placed we lose £75 on the losers and make £25 -5% = £23.75 on the winners. Making a net average loss of £1.25 on every £100 placed.

Laying, instead of Backing, is just as unprofitable. The figures are just reversed.

Of course, if you bet regularly on Betfair, the 5% commission gets reduced. I usually get between 4.5% and 4.7% commission, but all that does is slightly reduce the above losses!

Ah, but you don't pay commission with the Bookies! But unfortunately they lower the prices on their markets to give themselves a profit margin. So a 50/50 chance on Betfair will be offered at the bookies at less than evens. No profit for the punter to be made there, if on average the horse will only win 50% of the time! You will simply be putting your money into the Bookmakers satchels, over a period of time!

The Law of Averages

How does the above tie in with our actual experience with various betting systems and tips, as reviewed on BST?

Surely we have "winning streaks"? Yes we do, and just as surely we have "losing streaks". If we flip a coin, we do not get a nice neat sequence of Heads and Tails alternating 50/50. We are likely to get a sequence like:

HHTTTTHHHHTHTHHHHHTHTTTTHTTT

That's a sequence of 14 Heads and 14 Tails making an average of 50/50 but in that sequence we got a sequence of 5 Heads and two sequences of 4 Tails. This is like our winning streaks and losing streaks.

Did you see the Derren Brown TV programme, a while ago, where he flipped a coin predicting he would get ten heads in a row? The flips were filmed consecutively without a break, and sure enough he got ten Heads in a row!

Then he showed how he did it. He was filmed for hours without breaks. He flipped the coin over and over until he finally, triumphantly got the ten heads in a row. All the original programme showed us was that ten Heads sequence and not all the other hours of random results.

We can be just as easily beguiled by winning streaks when we test out our betting system ideas. We get a winning streak of 75% success to 25% failure and think we have a sure-fire winning system. Then we "go live" with the system and lose money!

This can happen with successful reviews on BST. I experienced this with my Review of "Soccer Overs" where it consistently made a profit during my 84 day review. Coincidently, a review of the tips started on LTO towards the end of my Review and it consistently made a loss during that second review.

Now I know the author of those tips makes a genuine attempt to find "value" in the odds offered on soccer. "Value" is where the odds offered are longer than the perceived real probability. So a 50/50 chance is being offered at 2.3 instead of 2.0, for example. On average you would make a profit on such "value" chances.

All tips and systems are attempts to find such "value" bets. What we try to do with our long BST reviews is attempt to see how these tips average out over a period of time.

The Law of Large numbers states that the larger the sample size, the closer the average result gets to the true probability. That's what went wrong with our 75/25 system above. Our sample size wasn't big enough. As soon as we "went live" with our system, the sample size increased and the results averaged out to the true figure.

The Flaw

Here is the hardest part for punters like ourselves to get our heads around. Each toss of the coin or each horse race is independent of previous tosses or races.

Because we know that things "average out" over time, we fall into the trap of expecting a sequence of results to reverse. If Derren Brown throws ten Heads in succession, we believe that a Tail "is due", because on average, it should trend towards 50/50. So we lump our bets on a Tail coming up next. But the chance of the next throw being a Tail is still 50/50 – it hasn't altered because of ten consecutive Heads. The next throw is an independent event.

Similarly, if four evens chances have lost their races today, it would be incorrect to expect the next horse at 2.0 is more likely to win. The horse doesn't know the last four lost! LOL! And the jockey (hopefully) is concentrating on getting his horse to win, irrespective of the last four losing favourites. The result of this race is NOT influenced by the last four results.

Many staking plans rely on result runs to reverse, because the results WILL even out over time. Conversely, some staking plans expect winning streaks to continue. So the stakes are increased to take advantage of "winning streaks" – both these are logically incorrect.

Increasing stakes or decreasing them, dependent on things averaging out or on "runs" is guaranteed to fail because, over time, there will be exactly the length and frequency of winning and losing runs as the probability of the outcome suggests. If the probability of an outcome is 50% or 0.5, the probability of two outcomes being the same is $0.5 \times 0.5 = 0.25$ or 25% so you could be misled into thinking the second race only has a 25% chance of being the same outcome as the first. But it hasn't. It still has a 50/50 chance, as it is independent of the first outcome.

Mathematically you can take the probability of success/failure, from this predict the likelihood of various lengths of losing and winning runs and from this work out a loss recovery or profit maximization strategy and alter your stakes accordingly. But it is the route to the poor house to expect any one particular race to be influenced by the previous races.

Similarly, people's expectations of winning the lottery are determined by their previous failure or success. You won £10 last week, so think you are on a "winning streak" and increase your stakes this week. Or you haven't won the jackpot in the last ten years so think you are "due" a winner. No you are not! Your chances of winning the jackpot this week are exactly the same as they were the first week, ten years ago.

However let's increase the sample size. You individually have one chance in 30 million (or whatever the actual odds are) of winning the jackpot. Let's say 10 million different lottery lines are bet on each week. Now our sample size has become huge. We have gone from a sample of one to a sample of 10 million. Assuming the jackpot odds are 1 in 30 million, the odds, on average, of the jackpot being won by one of the 10 million lines is 1 in 3 or 33%. Therefore, on average, the jackpot is won once in every three weeks by someone. But the chances that "it could be you" are still one in 30 million.

Also if the jackpot is not won one week, the odds on the "rollover" jackpot being won next week have not altered, a jackpot win is not "due". Similarly, on week three. The chance is still one in three of one line winning. Of course due to promotion, more people pay for more lines on rollover weeks, so the sample size may increase from 10 million to 13 million. So the chance of the jackpot being won that week has increased, but YOUR chance of any one of your lines winning is still one in 30 million. Your only hope is to buy 30 million lines! Or whatever the number of possible combinations is. Then you would be guaranteed to win the jackpot for a £30 million pound investment!

This is the Law of large numbers. Probability is always constant. Your chances are always the same. Make enough bets and you will achieve the average results, but any one bet always has the same chance as any previous, or future, bet.

Here's another brain-twister for you to ponder over this week – I won't explain it, but it is the opposite of what you might think. Despite the "law of averages", the larger the sample size, the greater the possibility of wildly unusual sequences of outcomes. For example if 10 million lottery tickets are sold, it is more likely that the same person wins the jackpot two weeks in a row than it would be if only two lottery tickets are sold per week …..

Unfortunately this also means that the longer you run a betting system, the more likely it becomes that eventually you will hit a disastrous sequence of losers! You have to be aware of this and plan for this to eventually happen, no matter how "successful" your system is right now.

Probably Accurate?

So are the Betfair prices an accurate assessment of the chances, as the consensus states? If they are, we can't make a profit on Betfair. Or can we?

Next week I will pursue this and see if we can answer these questions.

League Table of Current Reviews

The systems under review have different starting banks, different stakes and some systems have variable stakes. A reasonable way of comparing the performance of systems is to work out the profit (or loss) as a percentage of the starting bank. Obviously this table doesn't replace reading the reviews, because _profit as %age of bank_ is not the only factor in judging a system. Nevertheless, I think it is a valid at-a-glance way of bringing the mass of data together.

I've colour coded the reviews that are the currently most successful, with the colour of their profitability graph to make them easier to spot. Some of the suspended reviews have been taken off the graph.

Unfortunately the top two best performing reviews did not report anything this week. Two other top performers, Betfair Success Formula and Betting Profits Soccer will be re-starting once the major soccer form has been established. Of those reporting this week, ABSX is doing the best and RebelBetting continues to look promising.

Profitability Graph

Here is a graph of the profit being made by the front-runners as a percentage of their starting bank. This gives a week by week comparative view of their progress.

It gives a representation of the volatility or dependability of each system. Ideally we would want a graph that increased each week by roughly the same amount. If a system or tipping service could produce that, then we would really have a winning review!

RebelBetting and Tommy's ABSX Method, although at a lower level, are looking consistent.

We got this comment from Harry Fox in reply to the BST "failed" review of his tipping service "The Betplan"

Hi Karl

I really appreciate your review of our service.

You have showed professionalism and control.

To be honest you have done us a real favour in pointing out our shortcomings.

The BetPlan system was a money making machine up until a few Months ago and you put us back on track by forcing us to have a long hard look at ourselves.

We were at the top and we became complacent, that's our fault, so your help has been invaluable.

The long journey back to being the best has begun, thank you!

All the best Harry

Wow! Well done Harry for your honesty (and Karl for his review). We wish you luck and success in your future tips. You can read the Betplan review here…

Admin, Gordon has requested suggestions from readers for Systems, Strategies and Tipping Services they would like to see reviewed. Just send the suggestions to me, at my usual address, rich@bettingsystemtruths.com and I'll pass them on to him.

We've had another question this week for Gordon or for any of our readers:

MR Racing

Hi,
Do you have any information on MR Racing and /or Richard Brown who seems to be promoting it as a recommended bookmaker who accepts LAY bets?

I have searched the web several times for information without much success and just yesterday for some reason unearthed a flurry of critical postings which claim that the process is a scam.

I would be grateful for any clues or pointers.
Thanks
Tony
